Additional Note

Three of the above prophetic word have come to pass.

1. migration out of Mexico and other Central American countries

Central American Immigrants in the United States-AUGUST 15, 2019

Increasing arrivals at the U.S.-Mexico border of migrants and asylum seekers from Central America in 2018 and 2019 significantly tested the capacity of the U.S. immigration system. While intense media and public attention has focused on surging migration of families and unaccompanied minors from the Northern Triangle countries of El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras, immigration from the region to the United States has a decades-long history. Nearly half of the approximately 3.5 million Central American immigrants residing in the United States as of 2017 came before 2000. Immigrants from the Northern Triangle comprised 86 percent of the Central Americans in the United States. In 2017, Central American immigrants represented 8 percent of the United States' 44.5 million immigrants. (ie 3.56million)
